Group opposes financial aid act

By Todd A. Haynes
Daily staff writer

The California State Student Association has condemned a policy requiring students who receive financial aid to sign anti-drug waivers.

The association adopted a resolution in August opposing a federal act requiring recipients of Pell Grants and other federal aid programs to sign an "Anti-Drug Abuse Act Certification" before they receive a loan.

Under the act, financial aid students must sign a form that certifies they "will not engage in the unlawful manufacture, distribution, dispensation, possession or use of a controlled substance during the period covered" by the grant.

Opposition to the federal act does not mean that the CSSA, which represents student governments from all 19 campuses in the California State University system, condones drug use, said Cindy Norton, legislative advocate for the CSSA.

Federal anti-drug certification 'invades privacy'

Instead, the association sees it as a right-to-privacy issue.

The federal measure unfairly requires financially dependent students to waive Fourth Amendment protection from search and seizure, while other students retain all rights as U.S. citizens, the CSSA resolution states.

The CSSA fears drug testing as a means of monitoring students receiving financial aid.

"It is unfair for students who don't use drugs to be subjected to drug tests," Norton said.

However, the fear of drug testing is unfounded, according to John Bradbury, associate director of financial aid at SJSU.

"There is no way they would enforce something like that (testing)," he said. "That is not part of the legislation, and they would never take it that far."

Instead, the act will affect only those students convicted of a drug-related crime, he said.

Other apparent inconsistencies also bother the CSSA, Norton said.

"Is a casual drug user going to lose (aid) at the same rate as someone who sells and distributes drugs?" she asked.

"Someone convicted of rape or murder could still receive money, but an occasional joint smoker would not."

Although SJSU's student body is among those represented by the CSSA, the opinions expressed by several SJSU students interviewed Monday differed from the position put forth in the resolution.

"I think (the drug policy) is a good idea," said Michelle Greene, a sophomore majoring in business administration and a recipient of financial aid.

The CSSA's contention that the federal act is discriminatory "is a poor argument for students," said psychology junior Alicia Mallory, who also receives financial aid. "You're not supposed to have drugs anyway."

The anti-drug act is one of several efforts federal authorities have made to try to reign in financial aid recipients.

Recently, officials announced more stringent rules aimed at cracking down on universities with high default rates — large numbers of students who have not paid back student loans, either because they failed to obtain jobs after graduation, because they did not comply with their student loan agreements or because they moved and did not inform bank officials of their new addresses.

Student falls down stairwell

By Brenda Vesko
Daily staff writer

An SJSU student fell more than 10 feet from a second-floor fraternity house stairwell during a party Sunday morning but suffered no injuries.

Kevin Robinson, a guest at the party, apparently had been drinking when he "flipped over the stairwell railing and landed on his back," according to Kevin Gilmer, Sigma Alpha Mu president.

Robinson, 22, dropped from the second to the first floor stairwell landing of Sigma Alpha Mu, 1567 S. Eighth St., at about 2:15 a.m., according to University Police Department Lt. Shannon Maloney.

UPD called San Jose Fire Department paramedics because some house members believed Robinson was injured.

However, when they arrived, Robinson was unhurt and was mumbling, Gilmer said.

Paramedics took Robinson to San Jose Medical Center; he was released two hours later, he said.

Fraternity members reported seeing Robinson on campus Monday and said that he appeared all right.

Disabilities act sparks conflict

By M.I. Khan
Daily staff writer

The director of SJSU's Disabled Student Services Program has asked the San Jose Mercury News to re-examine its opposition to the Americans with Disabilities Act, which recently passed the U.S. Senate.

In a letter to the editor, Martin B. Schuler challenged the newspaper's contention that the new legislation will not be cost effective.

The measure bars discrimination against people with disabilities and requires that transit vehicles and stations be accessible to those with disabilities.

"By providing accessible designs in new construction and retrofitting old vehicles (where feasible and reasonable), we may see more disabled as employable," Schuler stated.

"It follows, that if they are employable, they pay taxes and are no longer in need of social services. Obviously that's cost effective."

Schuler further challenged the Mercury News' contention that the law would "prove to be a huge expense for a benefit (mass transit) that can be provided less expensively through other means."

"Not true!" Schuler stated in the letter. "The expense . . . is a minimal part of the cost of a new bus or light rail or BART (Bay Area Rapid Transit) subway system when done properly as we have in the Bay Area."

There are about 500 disabled students attending SJSU, of whom "60 percent have mobility impairments," Schuler said in a phone interview.

"This legislation will (for example) enable them to get the part-time jobs at a movie theater or variety store — jobs that require regular transportation."

About 13 percent of the U.S. population is disabled, Schuler said, but fewer than one percent of the disabled population is employed.

"This legislation will change that," he said.

The act currently is being reviewed by the House Surface Transportation Subcommittee. Hearings on the legislation are being conducted today and Tuesday.

Preliminary reports indicate that the subcommittee will approve the legislation, which passed the Senate by a 76-8 vote.

"We should begin to remove the barriers that have prevented the millions of Americans with disabilities from participating fully in the society," said Rep. Glenn Anderson, D-Calif., chairman of the Public Works and Transportation Committee. "Access to transportation is a necessity, not a luxury."

Rep. Norman Y. Mineta, D-San Jose, agreed.

"Twenty-five years after the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964," he said.

A.S. seeks better dorm ties

By Anne Dujmovic
Daily staff writer

Associated Students directors will make a house call to Joe West Hall Wednesday in an attempt to meet campus residents and address their needs.

Instead of holding their regular weekly meeting at 4 p.m. in the council chambers, directors will hold a special meeting at 7 p.m. in West Hall, where they will introduce themselves to students who live in the residence halls and give them an opportunity to ask questions and voice their concerns.

It is the first time in five or six years that the board has ventured outside its chambers, said Helen Woodhouse, A.S. secretary.

"Students only know of us during campaign time . . . It's time for us to live up to our promises," said Jennie Reyes, director of intercultural affairs.

A.S. members said they hope holding a meeting in West Hall will increase both student awareness of student government and board members' awareness of what is happening on campus.

"(The A.S.) is everyone on campus . . . Our meetings are empty," said Jim Walters, A.S. vice president. "We can't make decisions in a vacuum."

'(The A.S.) is everyone on campus . . . Our meetings are empty. We can't make decisions in a vacuum.'

—Jim Walters, A.S. Vice President

Two student populations who most likely know about campus concerns are the students who are here 24 hours a day — fraternity members and residents, said Walters.

"We haven't paid much attention to either one," he said.

Board members want to change that.

"It's about time to be more visible to students," said Reyes. "A lot of people don't know who we are."

Reyes said she would like the A.S. to hold future meetings outside the council chambers, in places such as the Student Union Amphitheatre, to make the meetings more accessible to students.

Jean Marie Scott, associate director of Housing Services, said she believes the A.S. decision to hold the hall meeting is positive.

The desired result is "getting the students to be aware of and understand who A.S. is," Scott said.

The board meeting will have an expanded public forum that will enable residents to ask directors questions or express their opinions.

Several residents interviewed declined to give their names but said they did not know about the meeting.

Asbestos analysis is false alarm

By Vincent T. Oddo
Daily staff writer

What was thought to be asbestos lurking on the second floor of Wahlquist Library Central has turned out not to be.

Three weeks ago several students noticed that some of the insulation on the second floor of the building had been torn off, said Pat Moss, SJSU Maintenance and Operations manager.

Ron Montgomery, SJSU public health and safety officer, tested a sample of the insulation but didn't find any signs of asbestos in the sample, Moss said.

"A mechanical failure in the air-conditioning system had torn some insulation off the pipes, and some of the people on Wahlquist's second floor had suspected that there would be asbestos contamination," he said.

Moss said, however, that there is usually no way to tell whether or not there is asbestos.

Moss did acknowledge the Drug war is everybody's fight

It's a cliché, one that is tired and old, but under present circumstances it holds true.
If you're not part of the solution, then you're part of the problem.

This was coined in the era of a war, Vietnam, and is applicable in another war. The drug war. The success or failure of this war is dependent on each and every one of us.

Recently, President Bush announced his strategy in fighting this war, and the amount of money that the federal government is going to spend. Many comments have been made about the inadequate funding of this war. Even if the United States had committed $80 billion instead of $8 billion this war is doomed to failure unless it has our individual commitments.

By Jim Walters

The federal government can only do so much and needs to do all it can. It can provide for helping sovereign nations to eliminate the production of drugs. It can provide resources to interdict the importation of drugs. It can provide for law enforcement to stop the rape of a nation's will, power, and murder of its young. It can provide the leadership in rehabilitating those who have fallen into the web of substance abuse. But the federal government cannot stop our use of drugs, nor can it prevent our sanction of drug use. The government can provide leadership and direction.

It can't fight the daily battles. Only you and I can.

Drugs will continue to destroy our youth, tear families apart, condemn people to live lives of poverty, undermine the productivity and competitiveness of our businesses, and in effect destroy the very essence of our individuality and creativeness. Unless we decide to stop it. No amount of federal funds or programs will succeed without our commitment to the fight. Drugs affect us globally, nationally, socially and economically. They need to be addressed on those levels. Drugs also affect us locally and individually. We have input into the grander war, but we have command of the individual one.

Let's take a look at SJSU and our war on drugs. In the past few months, the Associated Students has given financial support to project PAACE. The A.S. Leisure Services is holding a fundraiser to further assist Project PAACE, with an eye to do a walk-a-thon in the spring. The A.S. Program Board is providing programming for the "Free Zone Cafe." These are just a few of the ways that the A.S. is providing leadership and direction in creating support for drug-free lives to replace the support that has been given to drug use.

The A.S., like any other government, cannot do this alone. It requires your involvement and commitment. Drug use is attributed to peer pressure; By the same token, peer pressure can prevent drug use. In that, I am also including alcohol. I'm not saying something as trite as "Just Say No." I'm trying to emphasize that drug-use will always be with us until we individually get involved.

Our actions and reactions support drug use. How many times have we laughed about the stupid things we or a friend have done after a few drinks? Doing this gives our implicit approval for moronic behavior caused by drug use. Have you ever had a friend that had a drug or alcohol problem and you didn't talk to him or her because you thought they would get angry? By not talking to them, friend to friend, and expressing your concern, you are saying that it is OK to use drugs. In numerous ways, every day our behavior sanctions drug use. Why don't we practice behavior that supports drug-free lives?

It's within our power.
When our behavior discourages drug use, then we can join in the larger battle. Project PAACE needs peer counselors, for which students can receive units. Local non-profit agencies can use your volunteer services to assist them in the rehabilitation and recovery of users. There are numerous community groups that are working in the schools and neighborhoods to prevent drug use from smothering the dreams of an entire generation.

Our own individual commitments to ending drug use, joined with the efforts of our neighborhood and government is the only way to allow us to proceed into the future clear-eyed and confident. Remember, if you are not part of the solution, then you are part of the problem.

South Africa's problem

Editor,
M.I. Khan's idea that the Coca Cola Co. is encouraging the South African apartheid system by selling Coca Cola is ludicrous.

Sanctions will not work. The United States solved her segregation problems on her own, the same way South Africa should.

The recent national election diminished the strength of the pro-apartheid National Party. The pro-reform, free market Democratic Party increased its strength in government. Whites made up the majority of the voters, of course. Sanctions did not cause this liberal shift. Black economic empowerment did.

Black buying power exceeds that of whites. The black underground economy represents 20 percent of the national economy.

Blacks are winning against apartheid not because whites are becoming nicer to blacks, but because apartheid is bad for business.

A Gallup poll in May found that 85 percent of South Africans oppose sanctions and 59 percent believe the presence of U.S. companies help break down apartheid.

South Africa is becoming more liberal not because of Marxist Desmond Tutu's speeches, but because blacks are earning more money.

If Khan the South African supports the abolition of apartheid, shouldn't Khan be in South Africa undermining apartheid?

South Africa isn't our problem, it's South Africa's problem.

So, Khan have a Coke and a smile.

Flag burning not a right

Editor,
This letter is in response to your recent columns on Sept. 14. It is only because of recent sensationalism by the press that the issue of "free speech" and executing those rights in burning the flag has become an issue. For myself, the flag is not just a symbol, as Michelle Smith contends, but rather it is much more.

The flag of the United States is known and respected world-wide. The reasoning is because of what it stands for. America is the land of opportunity. I stress the word opportunity because lately even that has become a tarnished word. We have entered a day where the citizens (and non-citizens) no longer are interested in striving to be the best, but rather just get by. And it is partially because there is lack of pride that we as a nation have succumbed to all other nations in all areas.

The flag does have certain circumstances when it should be burned. "The flag, when it is in such condition that it is no longer a fitting emblem for display, should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning."—The Encyclopedia Americana Vol. 11 page 317.

The reasoning: The symbol of the United States is sacred. That's it. It's not a prop for a piece of art, nor a form of freedom of speech. When defaced or physically altered, it is an aggressive and violent stab at anyone who is an American. It is a political statement all right, it's a statement to your fellow man how much you hate this country and all the rights within it.

Why would you want to do that Michelle? Would you remain seated when a judge walked into a court of law? Would you blow the offertory candles out in a church as a freedom of speech?

The flag is not just a symbol, it is sacred just as the first two pages of the Spartan Daily are free from advertising. It should and shall be respected.

Know your facts

Editor,
I'm glad to see the Spartan Daily is a forum for experts on crime and justice. That is if you believe a chemistry and journalism major are experts or even knowledgeable on criminal justice. I'm talking about staff member Lisa Elmore, and George Watts, the author of a letter in the Sept. 12 Spartan Daily.

If Elmore knew what she was talking about, she would know that William Bennet has been stressing education about drugs. He stressed this on "Meet the Press" nearly six months ago. But I suppose a recent comment and no background are sufficient for a Spartan Daily article.

The blatant contradiction by George Wallis is also puzzling. He correctly states that legalizing drugs will lower the price. But, he says as price decreases, so will supply. What? The reason for a high price in many cases is a low supply. Likewise, large amounts of drugs will lower prices. Not the other way around, and by no means does low price mean something will go away. Look at Hyundais and V.W. Bugs.

And if we execute drug dealers as Wallis suggests, why don't we also kill anyone who has ever given him a beer?

Parking getting worse

Editor,
I'm concerned about the virtually non-existent parking situation. School has been open for more than three weeks now and I've only been able to park, in any one of the three garages, twice. This is a tragedy. The only times I was able to park, I parked on top of the garage and I arrived at 7:30 a.m. Two days out of the week, I start school at 10:30 a.m. so I can pretty much forget about parking in the garage.

Recently, I spoke with one of the parking lot attendants. Explaining my situation to him, he stated "There are only one thousand parking spots available here and there are 30,000 students." I replied by asking, Why are you then still selling parking passes when the garages are already filled to capacity by 8 a.m.? He told me I could get a partial refund and informed me that I could park down by Spartan Stadium and ride the bus back which would take 25-35 minutes. That's exactly why I purchased the parking pass in the first place so I wouldn't have to park down there. I ended up parking down by 8th and Williams sts., which took me 10 minutes to find. I spend 25-35 minutes on the road driving to SJSU and to add another 25-35 minutes is outrageous.

Another alarming blow came to me after I was talking to a student living in the dorms. He informed me that he parks his vehicle in the garage on an almost permanent basis. Oh great, there's one less space for me as well as anyone to park.

My parking suggestions are as follows:
Limit the number of parking passes sold.

If no limit, lower the rate in half. Build more parking facilities.

Let dorm students park by Spartan Stadium.

I don't feel this is asking too much and I know I'm not alone.

Bike compromise

Editor,
As a bicyclist myself, I do not feel that bikes should be banned altogether on campus.

While I bicycle to my classes, I always do so on surface streets, or when there are not many people around. While I agree that it may be unsafe for pedestrians around the Student Union walkway, or in the morning rush hours 9:30 a.m. through 11:45 a.m., I feel that if bicyclists avoid that area, or push their bike at such busy times, that would guarantee pedestrian safety without restricting the freedom of bicyclists.

There is also a safety factor in this downtown area, especially at night. This is yet another very good reason not to ban bicycles on campus. It is much safer for anyone, especially a woman, to bicycle rather than walk on campus late at night. I'm sure that anyone who studies late at night, especially after 10 p.m., would appreciate the freedom to bicycle, if only for personal safety reasons.

While I cannot speak for the bad example of bicyclist on various campuses, I would say that the same could easily be said of drivers, yet cars are not restricted. Ninety-nine percent of the bicyclists are courteous, watchful, and alert when biking on campus. To concentrate on the one percent of the uncourteous and irresponsible bicyclists would restrict the freedom of the other ninety-nine percent.

There is also more of a threat to pedestrians than the occasional bicyclist. The maintenance cars without the warning beeps that stop traffic. Even before I started bicycling to classes, I was frequently more surprised by the sudden presence of these carts than skateboards and bicycles.

Not a basher, just a journalist

Now, I am not one to pick on the Greeks...

I'm not exactly a fan of fraternities, nor a sucker for sororities, but they have been on the front pages of the newspaper lately and thus on my mind.

Two fraternity-related incidents involving University Police Department officers occurred within a week of one another.

Sunday morning, an SJSU student fell from a second floor fraternity house stairwell during a party.

Apparently, one Kevin Robinson flipped over a stairwell landing of the Sigma Alpha Mu house, dropping more than 10 feet to his dismay.

Robinson was reported drinking at the party and was left with a few bruises to his body and ego.

And, Friday night, UPD were called to break up a "large fight" involving three fraternities on South 11th Street, according to a police report.

Apparently, there was a misunderstanding over the guest list.

The fight resulted with a member of Kappa Sigma being treated for cuts and bruises at a nearby hospital.

Now, this is not the kind of thing to write home to the folks about, is it?

But, is it the kind of thing to write in the campus newspaper?

I think so.

Now, I don't want to go into the pros and cons of the Greek system.

My point is much more objective.

When you call attention to yourself — falling on your face in the process — someone will inevitably criticize you.

And rationally, there's nothing you can do about it other than to accept it gracefully.

Let's face it, the Greeks are famous, and infamous, for their parties.

Big parties.

The kind that are promoted with huge banners across house fronts, or on numerous fliers, with crowds spilling onto frontyards and driveways, music blaring, and people partying gaily long into the night.

There's nothing wrong with any of that.

And there isn't anything wrong with having the bad press. The two almost go hand in hand.

In the past, the Spartan Daily has been accused of "Greek-bashing." And to some extent, this has been the case.

But, we don't pick on the Greeks so much for their lifestyle, as much as because it is easy to do.

So my advice is simple.

If you belong to one, and you don't want bad press, have smaller parties.

Or else, get better organized.

If not, I'll see you on the front pages...

involves nothing that can't be controlled, according to Moss.

"We keep track of when the asbestos situation becomes harmful in a particular area around campus," he said. "When an asbestos problem is suspected, but nobody is sure, we close down that particular area just to be on the safe side."

Testing is then done through Montgomery, who takes a sample from the area to his lab. If asbestos is present, contractors are sent to clean up the area.

"When people suspect an asbestos problem, we take it seriously," Moss said.

In the case of Wahlquist Central, Moss stated that maintenance operations had done an abatement project for asbestos in August of 1986. But because they were unable to find the results of that project, Montgomery was sent to do a test on Wahlquist's second floor, Moss said.

The air conditioning for the second floor was turned off temporarily during examination of the area.

None of Wahlquist Central's other floors were affected by either the mechanical failure or the testing.

Disabilities

1964, we are finally making a tangible attempt to bring all of the members of the disability community into the community of the workplace," said Mineta, subcommittee chairman.

"For years, many disabled individuals have cited a lack of transportation as the chief barrier to getting a job, to self-respect and to the feeling of self-reliance that a career brings," said Mineta. "I am hopeful that these barriers will fall and permit mobility for everyone."

The legislation requires that all new bus and rail facilities and vehicles be accessible to the disabled. It requires that cities and counties make an effort to purchase accessible vehicles before non-accessible vehicles are purchased, and that one car per train on rail systems be accessible within five years.

It further requires that all intercity rail stations and key stations on other systems "be made accessible in three to 20 years," depending on cost. All new intercity buses must also be made accessible to the disabled.

Legal fees top A.S. costs last year

The Associated Students spent more money last year on legal fees than in any other year before its incorporation in 1980.

During the 1988-89 academic year, the board dispensed about 11 times more money than in 1987-

88 — almost $45,000, compared to about $4,300 previously, according to a report by Tom Boothe, executive assistant.

"There was a great deal of rhetoric from last year's board," Boothe said in his report before the board at last Wednesday's meeting.

"We need to re-evaluate our approach based on the previous board's actions," Boothe said regarding that board's willingness to spend money on litigation before exhausting alternatives.

Current board members want to work with them, according to Boothe.

Ex-Spartans decline Jammer jobs

By Michelle Smith
Daily staff writer

Former SJSU basketball standouts Detrich Waters and Chris McNealy have passed up an opportunity to play professional basketball for the San Jose Jammers, opting to continue their careers in Europe.

The Jammers, one of three new expansion teams in the Continental Basketball Association, drafted Waters and McNealy and attempted to sign them for the 1989 season, which begins Nov. 14.

If signed, it would have marked a homecoming for both players, because the Jammers are currently negotiating with SJSU to play in the Rec Center arena.

McNealy, who played basketball here from 1980-83, is playing in his first year of a three-year commitment with Arimo in Bologna, Italy, according to his wife Wanda. McNealy is playing in the Division 1-A Italian league and has no plans to sign with the Jammers, she said.

"He went there for exposure and economics," Wanda said.

Waters, who played at SJSU from 1986-88, was one of 10 players involved in last season's highly publicized walkout. The athletes protested the coaching methods of former head coach Bill Berry, who was fired at the end of the season.

SJSU Sports Information Director Lawrence Fan said that Waters is playing professionally in Portugal, but had no further knowledge on his career.

Neither Waters nor McNealy could be reached for comment.

The lure of high-paying contracts in European leagues attract many U.S. athletes, said San Jose Jammers head coach Cory Russell.

"It's money and there's lots of it," Russell said. "The quality of play is not (as good) like that of the CBA."

Russell stressed that for many athletes playing in professional sports is a brief career, so there is added pressure to make money while they can.

"The average career in the NBA is 3.2 years and you can hope for five years, but players have got to make the most out of it," Russell said.

McNealy made the most of his career as a Spartan.

He is the Spartans' third all-time leading scorer with 1,236 points and third in assists with 203.

During his three-year tenure at SJSU, McNealy was selected as an honorable mention All-American in 1982 and 1983.

While scoring was McNealy's specialty, Waters excelled underneath the boards.

Waters missed the early part of the 1988 season due to academic ineligibility, but topped the Spartans in rebounding during 1987-88 with an 8.4 average.

Former Spartan Norman Brown gave up a starting role for a local professional football team, so he could tryout for SJSU's 1989-90 basketball team, he said.

Brown, a starting inside linebacker for the San Jose Bandits, a minor league professional football team, left two weeks ago after playing in the team's first six games of the season.

Brown was the Bandits' third leading tackler, said Joe Cognata, special teams and offensive backfield coach. Brown told the team he left for personal reasons.

"We'd welcome him back next season if he wanted to play," Cognata said.

Brown, who played on SJSU's football team in 1987 and 1988, was also a member of the replacement basketball team last season. He joined the Spartans after 10 players walked out on Jan. 18 and he played in 11

Jammer deal expected today

By Michelle Smith
Daily staff writer

San Jose Jammers General Manager Dave Cortese is confident that the agreement pending between his team and the Student Union Board of Directors could be approved and executed as early as today.

"It was a very positive meeting," Cortese said of Monday's meeting with SUBOD officials. "We were able to go through and cover all the issues and solve all the differences to everyone's satisfaction."

An earlier snag over the sales of season tickets at the Rec Center box office appears to be ironed out, according to Cortese.

"There will be a season ticket function at the Rec Center box office," Cortese said. "We have agreed in principle to the delimitation of responsibility."

War declared on phony souvenir sellers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Francisco Bay area baseball officials have declared war on sellers of unofficial baseball souvenirs, saying Monday the fake T-shirts, caps and other items are costing Major League Baseball millions of dollars in lost business each year.

"We want to put the community on notice that we will not allow infringement of baseball copyrights," said Richard White, president of Major League Baseball Properties, the official purveyor of team goods. "Whoever is doing it, we will vigorously prosecute."

games, grabbing eight rebounds and posting two assists.

However, this season there will be a new coach and a whole new crop of players competing for the 15-man squad.

"I wanted to focus on some thing to keep me in school," Brown said. "The Bandit organization was geared more toward somebody out of school."

Although Brown used up four years of eligibility playing collegiate football, he can still play one year in another sport.

The Bandits were another outlet in which Brown could display his football skills, he said. His football collegiate eligibility ran out after last season and he was not drafted by an NFL team.

Last season, as an outside linebacker for the Spartans, Brown was fifth on the team in total tackles with 55.

Brown emphasized that he has no bad feelings toward what he referred to as a successful Bandits organization.

"Playing for the Bandits was too much fun," he said. "We would go out and party after practice. I couldn't see myself keeping it up and being a success in life. I need my degree to fall back on."

Brown emphasized that he wasn't motivated toward the Bandits' program because it was too relaxed, he said. He preferred the much more disciplined and structured intercollegiate programs.

Brown likes his chances of making the team this season, he said. He is a committed team player and has experience at the Division I level in basketball.

Brown was an all-league selection in football, basketball and baseball at Oak Grove High School, he said. Football was the sport he grew up with, though.

However, Brown is attracted to the fast-paced nature of basketball, he said. He compares it to his hyperactive personality.

This is the second time in one week that university police have responded to a fraternity-related incident.

Friday night, UPD was called to break up a "large fight" involving three fraternities on South 11th Street, Maloney said.

A member of Kappa Sigma was reportedly treated for facial lacerations at Santa Clara Valley Medical Center following the fight, according to Kappa Sigma member Andy Rayl.

Neither UPD nor the San Jose police confirmed the extent of their involvement in Friday's incident.

FESTIVAL FORTUNES GAME

1. NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. Pick up a Festival Fortunes Instant Win Game Piece from a participating college store retailer in the United States, during the Festival Game Period posted in advance at various locations in your campus area. Limit one game piece per person per day. However, the participating college store may distribute more game pieces at its option as supplies permit. You may also participate by sending a written request for a Festival Game Piece and a self-addressed envelope to the participating college store retailer in your area. A single Game Piece will be sent in response to every request received by the college store retailer during the Festival Game Period, so long as there are undistributed Game Pieces on date of receipt. The participating store is the only outlet distributing Game Pieces for the Festival Instant Win Game being conducted by that college store.

2. HOW TO PLAY. Scratch off the protective coating from the area indicated on each Festival Game Piece to determine whether you are a winner. If the word "Scooter" appears on your Game Piece, you win a motorized scooter. If another of the prizes listed below is named on your Game Piece, you win the prize named. To claim your prize return your winning Festival Game Piece to the college store where you picked it up. Prizes will not be awarded unless a winning Game Piece is presented. After recording your name, address and other information for the major prize winners, the college stores will award your prize immediately. See your store for further rules and regulations.

Because this circular was printed prior to sale date there could be some unforeseen delay or nonshipment of items advertised herein. We regret any inconvenience this may cause and will, to the best of our ability, offer a suitable substitute or raincheck on any nonshipment items. We reserve the right to limit quantities on some sale items. Special prices are in effect during the sale only while quantities last.
